CUTE LITTLE CIRCUS PETS MAY BE BOUGHT AS GHRISTMAS PRESENTS

Any Performing Animal From an Elephant to a Trick Pony Is Available at Sale

Did you promise your darling little boy or girl to buy for Christmas anything that might be asked? Will you keep that promise in spite of everything? Maybe you will, but there is a big chance for doubt. Suppose, for instance, one of the youngsters interested in the amateur circus of the year has developed ambitions in that direction. Then consider also that the only obstacle to realization of the ambition is inability to secure the circus animals. That generally settles things. But just now hereabouts conditions are peculiar. The circus ambition may be realized in all particulars. The animals are available. What is more they will be on sale.

Just imagine daddy's confusion when darling little Doris demands a baby lion! What will he say when Billy declares the only thing that will make him happy is a regular elephant. If daddy has promised, what is he to do? Either he will be compelled to renig or he will go to the circus animal auction sale and gets the pets as per promise. So if you have not made any unconditional promises you are safe. If you have promised you are up against it. The youngsters will not listen to reason. They will demand the fulfillment of the pledge.

Those who desire pets for Christmas presents may attend the sale of the Palmer Brothers' menagerie at Runnymede next Monday. Sheriff Sheehan will sell at public auction at the winter quarters of the circus on that day a number of lions, an elephant, camel, bears, monkeys, ponies and other animals. Michael Golden, who has a chattel mortgage on the outfit, will most likely bid it in. He is an old show man and is preparing to go on the road early next spring.

But Golden may have fierce competition. Rumors are current that a bunch of students from the University of California will be there to get a real live bear as a mascot, and Stanford boys and girls will try to get some new pets for their fraternity and sorority houses. So look for some interesting scenes at this circus animal sale.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Thursday afternoon the "barn" on the Sequoia campus was the scene of the annual jinks of the Sequoia girl students. The senior and the junior girls who came arrayed in boys' "togs" escorted their fair sisters of the freshman and sophomore classes. It was a very democratic affair, all stations of society being represented.

Since there were no electric lights only the pale glow of candles illuminated the scene. This gave the "young men" of the party a chance to bestow their affections upon certain chosen damsels.

The time was spent in dancing and at 6 o'clock delicious refreshments were served by the "little kid" teachers.

Plays Postponed

The presentation of "Dolls" and "Food" by the Sigma Delta Kappa of Sequoia Union High School has been postponed until Saturday, January 7. The plays were to have been given tonight, but unforeseen conflicts have arisen which make it impossible to carry out the plans as arranged. Sigma Delta Kappa regrets the postponement of the plays and hopes that Saturday, January 7 will be more accommodating to the public.

If you have already purchased a ticket, retain it for reservation at the Ryan drug store January 5.

Those taking part have been working hard to make the plays a success and we assure you that you will not be disappointed when you see them. They rank along with former Sigma Delta Kappa productions that have been extremely popular. Tickets are on sale and may be obtained from the high school students or Miss Boyle.

Forum Party

The Forum Club of Sequoia Union High School gave a party in the drawing department last Friday evening. Dancing and games took up the greater part of the evening, while several of the club members gave selections of poetry and readings The affair was very informal and was greatly enjoyed by those who were there. Refreshments were served later in the evening, with the club president, Robert Felton, as the master of ceremonies.

The club is planning to give another party soon for the new members who will be taken into the club next semester.

SPLENDID WORK BEING DONE BY WELFARE WORKERS IN COUNTY

Auto Rides for Hospital Patients--Opening of Preventorium in San Mateo a Great Benefit

When the county community organizer came over from the coast side she assumed that the community service might find something to do for the men at the base hospital. After consulting with Mr. Evans, director of the Red Cross house, it was decided that the greatest winter need was a weekly ride for each man able to get out.

In each community Miss Fiedler went first to the woman's auxiliary of the American Legion. If that organization was working to capacity, which was usually the case, she appealed to the local woman's club or to some individual woman, as the case might be.

At Redwood City Mrs. Walter Baker agreed to assume the responsibility. Although her decision came among the last in the county, she put into the field first her motor corps service — from 4 to 6 cars every Monday afternoon. This she has done for three weeks with the hope of continuing through the winter.

Those from the different communities desiring to help should communicate with Mrs. Baker at once; Mrs. Lockwood or Mrs. McGinn, San Mateo; Mrs. Norman Malcolm or Mrs. Lela Bentley, Palo Alto. Can Menlo Park do something?

It is hoped that the women's clubs of San Mateo county can together raise about $25 a month to pay for the transportation from San Francisco of a troupe of performers, thus to vary the program of entertainment for the ex-service men. Any club or organization wishing to give however small amount toward such a fund should communicate with Miss Caroline Fiedler, 225 Washington street, Redwood City.

Opening of Preventorium

The welfare and public health service of San Mateo county dedicated its new preventorium at 418 North C street, San Mateo, yesterday afternoon. A number of local residents attended.

The welfare commission, which is headed by Mrs. H. B. Dana of San Mateo and of which Mrs. David E. Graham is the local representative, is to be congratulated upon the wonderfully fine work it is doing. The preventorium is a place where those who are threatened with tuberculosis may be taken and given treatment. They are given the best of care and nursing for as long as is necessary and in many cases theey are able to successfully combat the great white plague and send the little people who they take away well and strong. If the patients are unable to pay there is no charge made and in any event those who are treated need make no payments if they so wish. This work is supported by voluntary contributions and is indeed worth while.

INSPECTOR OF MATERIALS FOR NEW HIGH SCHOOL

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees of Sequoia Union High School Supervisor John MacBain was selected as the inspector for the new high school building. It will be his duty to inspect all material that goes into the structure. In other words, it will be his province to see that the contractor carries out his agreement and furnishes the proper material as agreed upon. Mr. MacBain is himself a builder of experience and a contractor. From his long years of work in the building line it will be difficult for any contractor to put anything over on hm that is not correct and proper. Mr. MacBain some years ago erected the beautiful Kohl residence at Burlingame worth $300,000. In this city he built the present high school building and Hotel Sequoia and a number of other structures of lesesr note.

John MacBain

With MacBain as inspetor of the proposed new building the taxpayers of the district may be confident that they will get their money's worth and that the structure will be well built and will be a credit to the county and state.

He carefully investigated the shipping developments of the district. All the information he received will be formulated into a report to be forwarded to the engineering department of the government Mr. Schffear is an affable, genial gentleman who makes a good impression upon all whom he comes in contact with.

Interment was in the Catholic cemetery at Halfmoon Bay, following a requiem mass celebrated in the church there. MISS FLORENCE GILBERT TO TEACH BELLVALE SCHOOL

Miss Florence Gilbert, a graduate of Sequoia Union High School, was graduated from the San Jose Teachers College yesterday afternoon and will enter her chosen profession as teacher in the Bellvale school in January. The later bus will be put on the Menlo run and will bring the pupils from that section who now take the trains. A saving of quite a sum will be made by using the bus instead of the train and inasmuch as the trustees will have the smaller vehicle on their hands it may be used to good advantage in the Menlo district.

Mr. McSweeney made a report yesterday showing the total amount of taxes collected to be $796,505.50, or 65 per cent of the 1921 county tax roll total.

MAKE THAT SURVEY

It is announced that both the San San Francisco and the Dumbarton bridge projects have received the sanction of the war department. It is a condition that is a happy one, as the two bridges are needed and are not at all likely to interfere with each other. The sanction of the department is merely a preliminary to effort that must be made beteore the bridges can be built.

Those who offered to contribute for a preliminary survey of the Dumbarton site should be asked to produce the cash at once. No more delay should be experienced waiting for the county authorities to learn whether they can use money subscribed by private parties. It is a pleasure to state that the local chamber of commerce and the other organizations of peninsula business men are at work on getting the cash in hand so that a survey may be made at an early date. Every one of the contributors should put in his bit with no expectation of receiveing it back directly. Let it go as a real contribution and not as aloan. The benefit to be received after the bridge shall have been built will repay the outlay many times over.

That survey should be made at as early a date as practicable. Then the war department will have to be consulted again to secure approval of the exact site chosen. By that time the supervisors will be ready to submit a bonding proposition. There is no need of further delay. Make the work snappy.

UNIQUE SERVICE

Word has just arrived from Washington of a very unique ceremony which was held over the bier of the unknown soldier a few days ago.

It appears that Congressman Free of this district received a wire on the evening prior to the burial of the unknown soldier from a mother in San Jose whose boy was killed in the world war and was among the unknown dead. The wire was unintelligible and Mr. Free had to ask to have it repeated. The response did not come back until the next morning. It was a request to put a wreath of red roses upon the bier of the unknown soldier, with a card reading,

"From Their Loving Mother."

As the wire arrived too late for Mr. Free to comply with the request of the dear lady who had sent the message, he was in a quandary as to what to do in order to carry out as well as possible the wishes of the mother who had lost her only son and who desired to pay her tribute to all of the boys who, like her son, were lost and among the unknown.

Finally Dr. Tully C. Knoles, president of the College of the Pacific, visited Washington and Mr. Free conceived the idea of asking him to assist in what developed to be a very impressive and unique seremony. The flowers were purchased and Mr. Free and Dr. Knoles went to Arlington, and, just as the rays of the setting sun cast their last splendor upon the bier of the unknown soldier, the roses were placed upon the tomb while Dr. Knoles uttered a beautiful prayer over the bier. A large group of tourists had gathered about and as the short but impressive ceremony was conducted all heads were bared and knees were bent in loving memory of the unknown.

Thus, over 3,000 miles from California, on a quiet evening by the shores of the Potomac in the beautiful cemetery at Arlington, where lie thousands of American soldier dead, the outpouring of love from the heart of a dear California mother was given expression through the short ceremony conducted by two of her townspeople in the presence of an inspired and reverent gathering of tourists from all parts of the United States.

You can always tell a patriot for revenue only because as soon as he is denied an office he turns against the government.

DUCK HUNTING

STORY NO. 35

By CLAUDE FOX

The fact that I had discovered the location of the mallard hole down between the first and second fences, which Fred Salter alone knew of, did not in the least interfere with the friendship between us, as such an event usually does between even the best of friends who are each engaged in the sport of acquiring wild ducks. We were out continually, when other matters did not interfere with our pleasure, and very often hunted together. Night and day, both in fair weather or during the worst storms of the winter season, found us either tramping through the marshland or in the stubble fields of the peninsula. How we ever stood the strain and still survive has always been a mystery to me, for there were many moonlight nights when we sat patiently for hours at some fresh water pond waiting for the musical chirp of the male green winged teal, or the short sharp quack of the female, when a thin coating of ice would form over the surface of the water, and many times we both returned home drenched to the skin from coming in contact with a heavy rain, with no shelter at hand.

Our greatest anxiety on these trips was whether we had enough shells or not. The question of packing up some lunch to take with us to replenish the inner man seldom entered our minds; there was no need of being thoughtless or negligent in this regard; the high cost of living period through which we are still and for some time have been passing, had never been dreamed of; provisions were cheap and money more plentiful than it is today; there was no living from hand to mouth in those good old days; the profiteerer was not engaged in his nefarious undertaking at the cost of human blood; both our homes were always well supplied with everything that could possibly be desired, but our anxiety for more shotgun shells overshadowed every other thought.

How often have I gone over to Fred's house around on Maple street, when we were anticipating a trip to the marshland, and found him counting his shells ere he was ready to start; how often have I seen a sweet faced motherly woman come from the kitchen to the back porch and say, "Now, Freddy, are you sure you boys have enough lunch stored away for your trip?" and heard him reply, "Don't worry about us, Mother, there are some fine winter apple orchards down the line."

Not satisfied with his answer, the screen door would close noiselessly and shortly would reopen, with the same woman in the doorway; in her hand would be a large bundle of sandwiches, neatly tied, which she would deposit in her boy's hunting coat hanging on the wall. Motherly thoughtfulness of that kind saved us many times from hunger when there was no necessity for our suffering therefrom.

At this period of our hunting career we were buying our ammunition from the village tinsmith, as he was called, Henry Horton, or 'Arry Horton, as he preferred to be known, who kept a little shop on Main street near where the Bell Theater now stands. As a side line he carried a small stock of ammunition, and as we could procure from him a pretty fair quality of black powder for 40 cents per pound, Fred and I gave him the benefit of our trade. All the old timers will remember him and the Missus, as he called his estimable wife. They had no children and were much attached to each other, a jolly, good natured English couple, who could create more innocent amusement and real fun in dancing an old time Virginia reel than a whole troupe of colored minstrels.

As we continued bringing in the strings of wild ducks and replenishing our ammunition supply, 'Arry used to regale us with tales of hunting in England, when he was a boy; of the vast hunting preserves owned by titled personages; of the amount of game thereon; of how he would sometimes poach on these hunting estates; of how the keepers paid by the owners were ever vigilant and the dire punishment that would be meted out to any transgressor were he ever caught, until Fred and myself expressed ourselves as very thankful that we were both born and reared under Old Glory, where we could shoot wild ducks to our heart's content, without molestation. Presently the little tinsmith began to take considerable interest in the game we were producing and evinced a desire to accompany us some night on a moonlight shoot, that is, he said he would go if the Missus gave her consent, and he was satisfied she would be all right at home. She was always uppermost in his mind and he in hers. He first broached the subject to Fred and then later to me. We both talked the matter over and while we had vague misgivings as to the successful outcome of the proposed trip, we could not refuse him. Mr. Horton had a horse and spring wagon and as we were then hunting at night principally on the Cooley ranch, we knew if we took him along a tedious walk of five miles each way would be saved, but we were both of the opinion that our jolly little friend would not be able to hit a balloon in the moonlight, much as he had hunted in merry old England. However, we informed him that we would take him on any one of three nights just before the full of the moon and he promised to talk the matter over with the Missus and then let us know which night he could go. The wife gave her consent readily, but she did not seem to feel half as anxious about her own safety when left alone at night among friendly neighbors as she did over that of her husband, who had never been hunting before at night time and knew nothing about the marshes. Fred and myself pacified her by promising that either one of us would remain with Mr. Horton during every minute that we were out and see that no harm would come to him.

The result was that we decided to go the coming Thursday night and promised faithfully to be home by midnght. We were to leave at 3 p. m. so as to reach Ravenswood before dark. Either Fred or I also promised the Missus that she should have ducks for her Sunday dinner. We made good in that respect, but it was fortunate, if the ducks we obtained at the Cooley ranch that night were to be considered, that we did not agree to donate any extra ones for the worthy lady's friends. How we both laughed about the trip after it was over — that is, when we had put distance between ourselves and our quaint little friend, so that he could not hear or see us. Everything went fine at the start. We met very promptly on time at the tinner's little shop; the horse was all hitched up to the spring wagon and 'Arry, after bidding his wife an affectionate farewell and cautioning her to take their black watchdog into the house and lock all the doors and windows, clucked to his horse and we were off. Just as we were leaving Dan Mullen came out of his harness shop and gave us a salute on his cornet. Whether that act put the jinx on our trip or not, I do not know; something, however, did.

I elected to sit in the back of the wagon with the guns and ammunition, while Fred climbed up on the seat with our guest. How I did pity my pal on that drive of five or six miles. We hadn't reached the Middlefield road before our little English friend was inquiring of Fred if he thought the Missus would be all right until we got back, and all the way down the same question was asked time and again. I smoked on in silence, knowing full well that my turn was coming before the night was half over. At last we reached the Cooley ranch, passed on down the gum tree lane to where there was a corral, where we drove in, blanketed the horse and tied him up to the fence. As we had given our promise that one of us would remain with the old gentleman while we were out, I felt that it was up to me to be chaperon the rest of the evening. I really felt sorry for Fred, for he had had such a siege of it coming down, but when darkness came down and the whistle of the widgeon echoed over the fields in the moonlight I wanted my every faculty on the alert for duck shooting and not answering questions about the safety of the Missus. It was rather mean of me at the time, but I did it. Grasping a handful of straws from the end of a bale protruding from the barn door, I closed my hand, reached out to Fred and told him we would draw for the honor. He drew the longest straw and I consequently lost, so to me was delegated the job of not only taking care of our guest, see that he did not fall in a ditch in the marshland, shoot himself or somebody else, and answer all the questions he flung at me concerning the Missus. Oh, I had a grand duck shoot that night, for just about one hour after dark and to tell the truth I was more than thankful when it ended. Fred said he would not get very far away, as he was satisfied our stay would be brief. Logical reasoning, for he was correct.

I took my charge over through the field to the westward of the barn where there was a short levee along which the surplus water from a well above flowed down toward the marsh —fixed a good dry seat for him in an old blind of tarweed and stubble, so that he was facing directly toward the moon, which shone its brilliant light into the center of quite a pond of water, where the ducks were wont to come to quench their thirst. It was a beautiful place to shoot from, for it was so light that after dark it was almost possible to see a mosquito alight on the surface of that water. Showing Mr. Horton where the ditch was and warning him not to leave his blind, no matter how many ducks fell, and that I would retrieve them, I went off to his left about 50 yards and within easy shooting distance of the pond, drove down a back stick, fixed my seat and settled down to await results. We were within talking distance of each other and having told him to always take the best shots when the birds were on the water and not to shoot in my direction, I anxiously scanned the rim of sky line in the fast coming twilight for a glimpse of the first birds that would soon let their presence be known. Suddenly a flutter of wings directed my attention eastward, just as four widgeon stopped short over the pond and settled in the water. It would have been an easy matter for me to have killed two at the first shot, but I waited patiently for my friend to shoot. Suddenly he called out, "I can hear them, but cannot see them." Every duck hunter knows that a widgeon, or for that matter any other duck needs no second invitation to vamoose. They rose beautifully against the white background of the mottled sky and it was an easy matter for me to drop one with each barrel. As the pair struck ground at the edge of the pond there was a flash and bang from the little tinsmith's gun and just as I glanced over in his direction to see what he was shooting at he let go the second barrel. Plainly it appeared to me that he was aiming straight over his head, and as I knew there were no ducks in that direction it became then and has ever since been to me a mystery as to just what he shot at. Jumping from the blind, from which I had warned him not to move, he took a couple of steps forward, calling out as he did so, "I've got 'em," and then came a splash. Springing from my seat I hastened to him. There he was with one leg down in the ditch, nearly to the top of his gum boots, but he had fortunately stepped into a shallow part near the end. Pulling him out was an easy matter, and when I saw he was not injured or wet I managed to get his nerves quieted and again placed him in the blind.

"Didn't I make a fine shot?" he said.

"You bet you did," I replied. "You got 'em all right, but you came near getting something else. Now for God's sake don't get out of that blind again until we are ready to go home. The two ducks are out there on the grass. I am going to get them. Now load up your gun and look out for the next shot."

Walking out to where the birds had fallen the dead one was easily found, but I had to look around for a few moments to locate the other, which had been crippled; but I finally did so, and wringing its neck I walked around the lower end of the pond and started for my seat. But suddenly a thought struck me and turning I threw the two ducks out into the center of the water to act as decoys. A moment later there was a bang from 'Arry's gun and the charge raked the pond from one end to the other.

"Did I get any?" he called out to me. "You certainly did," I replied, you got something which we already had; those were the two dead ducks which I threw out in the pond for decoys." For the first time during the trip he let out a hearty laugh and exclaimed, "The blooming buggers, I thought a whole flock lit." It was a great joke he thought; I could not see it in that light; there I was standing not ten feet from the waters edge, in plain sight, and he had not noticed me. From a theatrical point of view I was having a grand time, it certainly was a "Comedy of Errors, but from a duck hunter's standpoint I was ready to quit, realizing as I did that I was hunting with a companion who was to a great extent not responsible, and that any moment I was liable to have an ounce or two of duck shot distributed through my anatomy. As a matter of fact I myself began to worry about the safety of the Missus.

Drawing out of my pocket a duck caller I blew a long shrill whistle, which I knew Fred would hear, as it was a prearranged signal that it was time to go. A low tule fog was drifting down the bay and gradually creeping over the marshland, and in a few momements more we were enveloped in its midst. It was a crime to leave that place that night, as the tide would soon be on the flood and I knew full well that the widgeon would come sneaking in for water just about as fast as we could load up and shoot. My friend in the blind complained about it becoming cold, and that the Missus would be worrying about him, so I told him that as soon as Fred came, which would be in a few moments, we would start for home. Sitting down again I waited patiently for just one more shot, for the birds could be heard working overhead and around us. All at once I spotted a bunch of six or seven flying low and circling as though they wished to get into the pond. Making up my mind that there was not going to be any more false alarms that time, I tightened the grasp on my shotgun and raised it to my shoulder just as the flock touched the water well bunched together, and pressed the left hand trigger, as that barrel scattered more than the right. Three never got out of that pond a nd I knocked over another as the balance arose. As I stood up I discerned Fred's tall figure coming down out of the stubble field, and I called out to 'Arry to unload his gun, that we were going. Fred had killed five, which together with the half dozen between the little tinsmith and myself, for he always swore by all that is eternal, that he killed two of them, made a nice string of eleven large birds.

We were soon back to the wagon and homeward bound. How I did regret leaving the pond at the Cooley levee that night; what I would have done to those widgeon will never be known, but while I lay there in the bottom of that spring wagon, thinking over the stirring events of the evening, my plans were formulated. We had promised Mrs. Horton to see her husband safely home, and we could not trust him to drive alone in that fog over roads with which he was not familiar. The Missus was waiting up when we arrived and gave us quite an ovation.

'arry Horton's hunting trip was the talk of the town. He made it such, for he would never become tired telling of his experience to those who cared to listen. Both he and his good wife have long since joined the silent majority, but as I write his image comes vividly before me, and his anxiety for the safety of the Missus, together with the "Comedy of Errors," in which the little English tinsmith played the leading role, will linger in memory for years to come.

Genius is bound to be recognized; if you are not recognized you surely are not a genius.

MENLO PARK NEWS

Mary's Help Hospital, a benevolent corporation, has applied in the superior court through Attorney Garret W. McEnerney of San Francisco for authority to sell the property known as "Paraiso Park," located near to Menlo Park. The corporation recently filed a map of the tract, in which it is divided into lots, with the board of supervisors, the map having been accepted and ordered filed with the recorder. According to the petition the hospital receives only $5 a month rental from the property and as it has no use for the ground, wishes to dispose of it. It is stipulated that the lots shall be sold on contract for not less than $1.000 cash. This tract of land was left by the late Kate Johnson to Archbishop Riordan to be used for the benefit of Mary's Help Hospital, which she founded. The tract comprises about 65 acres. It includes the land leased by Mrs. McKnight and a parcel on Santa Cruz avenue. M. A. McCann, the sales agent, says he has nearly half of the property already disposed of. The frontage of 40 acres on the highway has all been sold and Mr. McCann expects to have the entire tract sold by early spring.

The Menlo Park Theater is engaged in sending through the mail a pretty program for the month of December showing the photo plays for the evenings of the show. The management has spared no expense or energy in its selection of reels. There is a good program for Monday, December 26. No one should miss it.

William Meyer, proprietor of the Safety Electric Works, has received his Christmas goods. Hot Point irons, percolators, toasters, waffle irons, heaters, lamps, etc., are among the large stock. His electrical tree ornaments are just the thing for the Christmas tree. Give him a call.

The Little Green Door, Fred Nessler, proprietor, for the next few weeks will be the scene of much activity, as it will be the place for the little ones to buy their toys, novelties, etc. Mr. Nessler has stocked his store with Christmas goods of all kinds. The children will be happy on seeing this big display.

C. F. Slinger, proprietor of the Fremont Garage, has secured the services of Byron Green, formerly of the Pierce-Arrow and Hayne Companies, to take charge of his repair department. Mr. Green will reside here permanently with his family. He is delighted with this locality.

C. F. Michaels, president of Langley & Michaels, the largest wholesale drug firm on the Pacific coast, is the purchaser of the Moses Heller home at Atherton, the account of which sale was made last week. He has a very charming family and will be a fine addition to this section and a big loss to Alameda county, where the Michaels family has resided for many years. This is another instance of the wonderful charm of the peninsula for one reason and another, the accesibility to the city.

One of the quickest sales of real estate made by Lambert & Walter last week was the Thomas S. Baker residence at Atherton station, opposite the Herbert Fleishhacker estate. Baker, who for the past few years was San Francisco manager of the Hongkong-Shanghai Banks branch, having been promoted and assigned to inspect all the branches of the head bank, which are situated in 38 different countries, found that he would be away from California from three to five years, so late Thursday evening he sent for Lambert & Walter, on Friday authority to sell the property was signed. Saturday the place was sold, Monday morning at 9 o'clock Baker left for San Francisco, sailing on the Taiyu Maru at 1 p.m. and the same day the purchaser was comfortably installed in his new home, much of the furniture of the previous owner having been purchased by him. Mrs. Baker, who accompanied her husband to China, will be remembered as one of the champion lady golfers, just before she sailed having won the state championship from Mrs. Harold Law. The new owner, Thomas T. Greaves, is another very prominent San Francisco man, being the head of the furniture exchange, which has the large eight-story building recently erected by the Sharon estate on Montgomry and Howard streets. Greaves also has an interesting family and for many years resided at Woodside. For several years he was located in the southern part of the state, but northern California was able to entice him back and the purchase of the beautiful Baker place assures that he will be a San Mateo county resident. The Baker property was valued at $50,000 and consists of five and a half acres of park-like grounds.

Shortly after the first of the year ground will be broken for the building of a $1,400,000 group of buildings for the care of neuro-psychiatric patients at the base hospital here, it was announced yesterday by Dr. J. M. Wheate, medical officer in charge. This followed announcement from Washington that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon had approved the appropriation of that amount for this purpose. The new group of buildings will face the road fronting on the Nash property. They will be beautiful in architecture. For two weeks the plans of the proposed buildings have been in possession of Dr. Wheate. The buildings for the neuro-psychiatric cases are to have capacity for 550 beds. These together with the beds for tuberculosis patients will swell the capacity of the institution to 1,000. Permanent buildings for the tuberculosis patients are expected to be built later, when special appropriations for this purpose may be made by the treasury department. The new buildings will be a compact hospital group, Dr. Wheate says. They will be two or more stories in height and will be semi-fireproof, the construction being of either brick or concrete.

The government will doubtless acquire the Walsh, Gillespie and Nash properties located in the tract where the hospital buildings are located. Some months ago the government purchased 87 acres of the tract.

James P. Maloney, the popular and enterprising taxi owner, who was supposed to be a confirmed bachelor, has deserted the ranks and last month became a benedict, taking for a life partner a pretty and winsome young lady of San Francisco. The news of the marriage was not divulged until yestreday, when the blushing bridegroom admitted that he had fallen a victim to Cupid's darts on November 26. Mr. Maloney motored over to the quaint little town of Sonoma and was there married to Miss Vernie Carberry of San Francisco. The ceremony was performed by Father John Byrne, a former assitsant pastor of the Church of the Nativity. The charming bride is a native of San Francisco, graduating from Notre Dame convent of that city some years ago. She is an unusually beautiful young woman, possessing a sweet manner, and enjoys the friendship of a large circle of friends. The young couple will reside in the city. Mr. Maloney has spent his whole life in Menlo Park and is well known on the peninsula. Mr. and Mrs. Maloney have the best wishes for a long and happy wedded life.

Senator S. M. Shortridge, who was to have left Washington for his home some time ago and who was detained there on account of the tariff bill now pending in congress, will leave the capital on December 19, coming direct to Menlo Park by the southern route, arriving here a few days before Christmas. He will return to Washington after the first of the year. He is interested in tariff legislation, desiring that all California products be given proper protection under the bill.

Alex J. Rind, the burglar arrested at the Timothy Hopkins home, was up for trial in the superior court at Redwood City on Monday. He entered a plea of guilty and was given a sentence of one to five years at San Quentin.

The bridegroom gave his age as 78 and the blushing bride said she had seen 72 summers come and go. This is Mr. Burton's third venture upon the matrimonial sea. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, while Mrs. Burton is equally prominent in the Woman's Relief Corps. The wedding was a sort of elopement from San Jose, as they desired to put over a little surprise on their friends.
